

Full profiles, specific-candidate wording. Mutually exclusive bins, most to least directive. The dark bin is the advice rate of the other figures; every other bin is a way of declining to name one candidate. A description of the presidential field is whole only if it names all thirteen registered candidates; the label is the average number named when the system describes the field. For deputies, national figures named as reference points do not count as candidates.